

Dr Cristiane da Mata is originally from Brazil, where she qualified as a dentist from the UFMG, in 2000. She moved to Ireland in 2006, where she completed a Masters in Public Health and a PhD on the use of ART in older adults. Since then, she has been involved in a number of research projects related to the oral healthcare of older adults, including the areas of oral health-related quality of life, minimally invasive dentistry and service provision and costs.

She is a lecturer in Restorative Dentistry in the Cork University Dental School and Hospital (CUDSH), where she teaches undergraduate and post-graduate students. Cristiane has published extensively in high impact journals and she is currently the honorary editor of the Journal of the Irish Dental Association. She also sits at the British Dental Editors and Writers' Forum (BDEWF) executive.

Cristiane's research areas of interest include Minimally Invasive Dentistry, Atraumatic Restorative Treatment, Cariology, Gerodontology, Quality of Life, and Dental Public Health.
